RE: COLEMAN, DOROTHY-94900 TF
 D/A: 8/7/08

Dear Mr. Locascio:

I had the opportunity to evaluate Dorothy Coleman as it relates to injuries she sustained during a trip and fall, which occurred on August 7, 2008. I performed an orthopaedic history and physical examination, as well as review of medical records supplied to me. These medical records include emergency room records from Monmouth Medical Center, Heartland Primary Care, Elizabethtown Diagnostic Imaging (MRI right shoulder), and Dr. Marcus Craig, and Dr. H. John Park of Elizabethtown Orthopaedic Associates.

HISTORY

The patient notes that she tripped over a low shelf in Circuit City sustaining an injury to her right shoulder. She was brought to the emergency room at Monmouth Medical Center where examination demonstrated tenderness of her shoulder with motion limited by pain, crepitus and deformity. An x-ray of the shoulder was performed, which demonstrated a fracture of the proximal humerus, and avulsion of the greater tuberosity with displacement. She was placed in a sling and swath and referred for orthopaedic followup.

Ms. Coleman followed up in her hometown, Elizabethtown, Kentucky, with her medical on August 12, 2008. These records document the shoulder fracture. She was treating this with narcotic pain medication, including Vicodin. She was referred to Elizabethtown Orthopaedic Associates who evaluated her two days later, on August 14, 2008. Dr. Craig documents that she had a 3-part fracture of her shoulder. X-rays taken in the office demonstrated displacement of the greater tuberosity of the proximal humerus. She was seen in followup on August 26 and September 9, 2008. On the later date physical therapy was initiated.

Re: COLEMAN, DOROTHY

MRI SCAN

On September 22, 2008 an MRI of the right shoulder was performed. This demonstrated the transverse fracture of the neck of the humerus, as well as the avulsion fracture of the greater tuberosity, which is displaced posteriorly. There is also a tear of the infraspinatus portion of the rotator cuff. Partial tearing of the supraspinatus portion of the rotator cuff is present. Review of the MRI demonstrates that the fracture at the neck of the humerus is mildly displaced and the greater tuberosity fragment is significantly displaced posteriorly from its normal location.

CURRENT COMPLAINTS

Ms. Dorothy Coleman notes that a great deal of pain and discomfort has improved. However, she has significant limitations. She is unable to lift her arm above shoulder level. She is unable to reach her side, and she is unable to rotate her shoulder. She notes this interferes in "all the little things in life". She gives examples. She was unable to hang her coat up on the hook in our office. She is unable to reach to the top of her head to wash or comb her hair. She is unable to lift heavy objects. She is unable to take anything off the top shelf with this arm. She basically notes loss of all motion above shoulder level and significant weakness.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION

Physical examination is performed focused on the right shoulder. She has severe loss of all glenohumeral shoulder motion. Examination of the contralateral shoulder demonstrates normal full range of motion. Examination of her right shoulder demonstrates 0° of external rotation, 20° of forward elevation and 10° of abduction at the glenohumeral joint. With shoulder abduction utilizing scapular rotation there is significant weakness of her rotator cuff.

These findings are consistent with a torn rotator cuff as well as a displaced greater tuberosity fracture, which is limiting external rotation and abduction.

SUMMARY

Dorothy Coleman sustained a slip and fall over a low shelf in Circuit City on August 7, 2008. As a result of this fall she sustained the following injuries:

1. Three-part shoulder fracture with displacement of the humeral neck, and significant posterior displacement of the greater tuberosity portion of the shoulder.
2. Rotator cuff tear involving full tear of the infraspinatus and partial tear of the supraspinatus.

Re: COLEMAN, DOROTHY

With a reasonable degree of medical probability the above diagnoses are directly related to this fall.

Radiographs were taken in my office of the shoulder. These demonstrate that the fractures are indeed healing, however they are healing in a malunion position. The greater tuberosity is healing in the displaced position, as well as the humeral neck. This is consistent with the patient's decrease in pain and also consistent with her loss of motion.

Therefore, the following diagnosis is also directly related to the slip and fall:

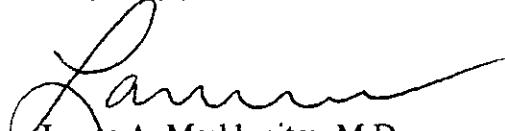

1. Malunion proximal humerus shoulder fracture including humeral neck fracture and displaced greater tuberosity fracture.

With a reasonable degree of medical probability the above injuries represent permanent injuries, which will never return to their pre accident status. The patient's bones are healing, however in a displaced position, which will severely limit both strength and range of motion in the future. In addition the rotator cuff tear causes significant weakness.

This patient is an extremely pleasant patient who has severe limitations of the shoulder, which are, with a reasonable degree of medical probability permanent in nature. This includes the significant weakness, as well as severe loss of range of motion. She will require extensive physical therapy, however with a reasonable degree of medical probability she will never return to her pre accident status, nor will she regain any significant further degree of motion, particularly abduction and external rotation secondary to the displaced greater tuberosity. With a reasonable degree of medical probability this will cause progressive arthrosis in her shoulder as well as progressive tearing of her rotator cuff, leading to further weakness and eventual progressive pain and discomfort.

All statements are made with a reasonable degree of medical probability.

Very truly yours,

Lance A. Markbreiter, M.D.
